Insect Life Cycles - Oregon State University

There are a multiple types of insect life cycles. Some insects, like aphids, can be born parthenogenically, without assistance from a male. Many insects lay eggs but in some the larvae are born alive. In some primitive insects the male will place a spermatophore on the ground and a female will come along, pick it up and fertilize her eggs.

Environmental effects on insects and their population dynamics

Insects have some of the most interesting and complex life cycles of any animals. In many cases only one stage of their lives is familiar to us, and we know very little about the others. This site is a place to document and learn about the life cycles of wild insects and spiders found in North America.

Bug Life Cycles

Tell students that some insects change completely during their life cycle. This is called metamorphosis. Just like the tiny caterpillar in Eric Carle's story, some insects go through four stages: egg, larva, pupa, adult. In the story, the first stage is an egg. Show the photograph of an egg or show the picture from the book.
